Mysterious Good Samaritan Stuns Local Resident

By Rachel R. Peine

Christine was panicking. Her groceries were on the checkout belt, but where was her wallet? Not in her purse. Oh, no! Maybe in the car. She asked the cashier, "Would you hold these things to the side while I run out to the car? I'll be right back."

After a futile search of the car, she went to the pay phone outside the Key Largo Publix and called work. "Did I leave my wallet there?"

"Hold on; let me look...It's not in the office. I'll check out back."

When her colleague returned to the phone with the bad news, Christine sounded stunned. "A man just came up behind me with a shopping cart, trying to get my attention. I figured he wanted to use the phone, and I wasn't focusing on him. I heard him say, 'There you go, sweetheart!' and didn't really get it. Then he said, 'It's all taken care of,' waved, and walked away. I looked down to see my groceries all bagged up in the cart. By the time I realized he had paid for them and brought them out to me, he was heading for the parking lot carrying a case of bottled water on his shoulder. I called out, "Thank you!" and then it really hit me what he had done... Oh, my God - THANK YOU SO MUCH! but he was gone."

Christine's wallet was waiting for her at home, and she's convinced the experience was a wake-up call to change her cynical attitude toward people. "I promise I'll be nicer to people from now on," she told me. "I'll look for things to do to help people. I want this man to know I'll pass on his kindness."

We're very happy that Christine found her wallet, and we applaud the actions of the mysterious Publix Good Samaritan. Whoever you are, thank you from all of us.
