Key Largo Woodrat, Cuter Than Its Name

The Key Largo Woodrat is Much Cuter than its Name. Key Largo author Nicky Laak has a t-shirt showing a very cute, big-eared, pink-nosed mouse-ish creature, not at all what a "woodrat" sounds like. Laak's children's book, Woodrat Jill explains that point and much more about this endangered local resident, found only in the Crocodile Lake National Wildlife refuge on Rt. 905 across from Dagny Johnson Hammock. The author, who was signing books at Moore Books in the Pink Plaza, described the efforts of volunteers and Tampa's Lowry

Park Zoo to breed the woodrats in captivity and release them in the refuge. Children and adults will enjoy the Jill's adventures when she leaves the comfort of the zoo and learns to survive in the wild. Crocodile Lake refuge is home to other threatened and endangered species, including the Schaus' Swallowtail butterfly and of course, the crocodile, which in the U.S. is found only in South Florida and the Keys. For more info about the refuge, call 451-4223. Woodrat Jill is available at Moore Books and other local bookstores.
