

Enchanted Sea Crystals

What are they?

I had been on the hunt to create a pleasant smelling and clean aired atmosphere in my house and just couldn't find something that worked. I tried Yankee Candles, oil burners and incense and they work for a while but none of them both smelled good and did something for my health. In my quest to find a solution, I discovered the health properties of sea salt crystals - and the idea for Enchanted Sea Crystals was born.

When warmed, Sea Crystals emit negative ions that actually clean the air and neutralize unpleasant odors. This fulfilled my desire for cleaner, healthier air, so my next step was to add the pleasant odor aspect. I started experimenting with different scented oils and came up with some great ones, such as Key Lime Rum; Coconut Rum; Feng Shui

Water, a clean fresh smell; and one I call Keys Disease, a tropical floral fragrance.

I knew I was on to something, a product that not only made your house or room smell better but is also good for you. So I began packaging the crystals with sea shells and a beautiful product was born.

After seeing such a positive reaction from friends we decided to expand, whole-selling them to local businesses (see ad on the back page of paper for where to find them). The cool thing about this product is that when the scent fades (after up to three months) the ionic properties still clean the air. And you can add your own favorite scent to them and they last quite awhile. I arrange my crystals in a pretty dish with a tea candle. The candle heats the stones

Peace of Mind Banking: Tibetan Refugee Monks Bless Centennial Bank

Just steps away from the site of the original Islamorada Post Office, destroyed in the the 1935 hurricane, the Dalai Lama's Tibetan refugee monks from the Drepung Gomang Monastery recently blessed the property of the Islamorada Centennial Bank.

"Everyone can benefit from a blessing," says Centennial

Bank's Stephanie Scuderi (picture above right with the monks). "For us, it underscores our peace-of-mind banking philosophy."

At the behest of the Dalai Lama, Drepung has supported international tour groups since 1999. These small groups travel to foreign lands for months at a time performing their religious chants and blessings to spread a message of peace.
