This is my seed table: Aggressive behavior toward another Blue Jay. Blue Jays scare away other birds and devour the sunflower seeds and wild bird food provided.

One of the things I appreciate most about living in the Upper Keys is the amount of birds and wildlife seen here every day. Everywhere I look there is life; it's almost like nature could be taken for granted. In stark contrast to the urban areas to the north, and even in the Keys, just 100 miles south and west in Key West, there are far fewer critters.

So why is it when folks visit our tropical archipelago, the first thing they want to do is go to Key West because it is on their "bucket list?" There's a lot Key West has to offer that we lack here, such as traffic and parking problems, tacky t-shirt shops, touristy bars, and people-watching... why do you think they call it Key Weird?

Yes, there is the diving and snorkeling, and the Dry Tortugas are a must see, but lets face it, what Key West is truly lacking is the Blue Jay! Cornell Ornithology eBird database lists only two reported sightings of Blue Jays in the Key West/Stock Island area in the last 10 years.

The Blue Jay is one of the most familiar and recognizable birds, and is a permanent resident of eastern North America, all the way through Florida, ending at Marathon in the Florida Keys.

So why are Blue Jays rare in Key West?

It has to do with the Blue Jays' diet. They like acorns... so much so that Blue Jays have been credited with the proliferation of oak forests in their range. The natural range for oaks in Florida ends at the mainland near Homestead. There are scattered live oak trees in the Middle and Upper Keys, these oaks having been planted since oak trees are not native here. Key West has zero oak trees and therefore no acorns. (Though I'm sure there's a few nuts down there.)

Part of the reason they can survive here is that Blue Jays are omnivorous; they have a varied diet consisting of fruit, seeds, nuts, insects, spiders and Side view of an alert Blue Jay at the seed table.

A quick loop to make sure the other bird got the message.

Now where were we? The Blue Jay resumes its meal.

small living creatures such as mice, and the eggs and hatchlings from bird nests. John James Audubon depicted Jays raiding a mourning dove's nest--but stomach analyses show eggs and chicks comprise an insignificant portion of their diet.

Their tendency to "cache" or stash their bounty near their breeding sites, ensures against going hungry, which is why they return to the feeder for multiple helpings.

Anyone who has ever watched a Blue Jay at a bird feeder understands that they are voracious eaters. Blue Jays disrupt the other birds, overpowering smaller and less aggressive birds, scaring away other birds near their food. In their pursuit of never going hungry, they can collect up to six acorns at a time, using their throat as a pouch to transport their cache to their breeding grounds, where they bury the acorns. Because Blue Jays don't remember where they hide every acorn, they have been credited with propagating oak forests.

Blue Jays are beautiful birds. Did you know that it is nearly impossible to differentiate between a male and female Blue Jay since males and females share the same plumage? For the gender neutral crowd, Key West sounds like the perfect spot if you were a Blue Jay. One way you are able to tell males and females apart is by their size, since male Jays are slightly larger.

The world is pretty confusing these days... not everything is as it seems. Blue Jays are not really blue!

The Blue Jays' feathers are actually brown but we perceive them as blue because of a phenomenon called light scattering, according to the Cornell Lab of Ornithology. The pigment in Blue Jay feathers is melanin, which is brown. The blue color is caused by scattering light through modified cells on the surface of the feather barbs.

Blue Jay close-up, with its crest relaxed.

Jays have bright blue top feathers, with white underneath. Their wings and tail are streaked with black, their tail has white outer feathers. They have a black "chinstrap" from ears down to chest, and the head sports a blue crest which lays flat when the bird is at ease. The crest stands up when in an aggressive posture. Blue Jays lower their crests when they are feeding peacefully.

The Blue Jay's heavy neck muscles rival those of the woodpecker. It has a straight black bill which can pierce dense acorns or eat locusts and grasshoppers, fare usually too big for smaller birds to handle.

The Blue Jay, also known as Jaybirds, are members of the crow family, which explains why they are large, loud and domineering. It kind of reminds me of the characteristics we see too often in our fellow humans whom I try to avoid. What Blue Jays do is part of a natural balance and shouldn't be judged as either good or bad.

The Blue Jay is a well-tuned feeding machine, possessing the ability to flick seeds into its stout beak.

They can hold multiple seeds at the same time. Blue Jays use their throat as a pouch to collect as many as six acorns.

CAROL ELLIS has lived in South Florida her entire life and Key Largo for 40 years.

Currently a Master Gardener volunteer, Carol has a degree in Journalism from the University of Florida and is the resident photographer /artist at Ocean Reef Club.

Blue Jay

All Winter long the blue jay stays,
When richer throated birds have fled.
About the cedar tree he plays
And Waits our daily gift of bread
The men who claim to know him best
Insist he's cousin to the crow,
A feathered robber, gayly dressed,
Not fit for decent birds to know.
Of morals he has none at all;
of manners, really very few.
There is no music in his call;
his charm lies in his coat of blue.
And yet I like him just for this:
On many a dismal Winter day,
When all the other birds I miss,
this fellow's brave enough to stay.

Artist of the Month: Jeanne Brennan

The Keys Spark Creativity

by Karen Beal

My first question of Jeanne Brennan was "How does a geophysicist end up in the Keys creating art?" Working in Houston, Texas, Brennan met her husband, JD Carballo, a Miami/Keys native. From 1992 on, they traveled several times a year to the Keys and after retirement in 2020, moved here. Brennan loves the small town feel. "You recognize people in the store or restaurant and can build friendships more easily than in a bigger place. And the sunrises and sunsets are pretty spectacular."

"One of the things that makes life special here is the many Keys non-profits that contribute to building a better place for us all to live, play and work. These organizations shouldn't be taken for granted."

Jeanne has always loved art, inspired by her mother's pastels, but a serious career was her first objective. In 2003 she started taking night classes at the Houston Museum of Fine Arts. Her skills in photography, watercolor and acrylic grew. When she retired, they blossomed. Natural beauty is her most common creative spark. Every day she finds something new to admire in the beautiful skies and waters of the Keys. This is particularly evident in her photography of birds and their environment. Brennan is a member of The Art Guild of The Purple Isles (AGPI), an Upper Keys art community that provides opportunities for both new and established artists. There are many art shows during the winter season to showcase the creativity of its members. Classes, a photo group and workshops taught by talented members are available throughout the winter months. The AGPI annual membership fee is very reasonably priced. Brennan urges everyone to check them out at AGPI.us.

Watercolors seem the best way to show off the Keys shoreline.

Photography has helped Jeanne capture the beauty of the Keys. It is its own art form and helps her find images for painting.

Batik using wax resist and watercolor dyes creates an unusual texture.

Jeanne works in many different media. Acrylics offer color and texture opportunities.

An artful digitally enhanced image of a local historic building.

Having gained an appreciation for photography from her father, it became a new tool to be creative. She uses LightRoom to tweak her Keys photos to reflect her vision.

Sailor, rest your oar
When your final dive is made,
and your battery's running low, You'll know there lies a boat for you many fathoms here below,
With your annunciators jammed on full and your depth gauge
needles bent,
Your accumulator's dry of oil and your air banks all are spent,
It's then you get to wonderin',
"is my life's boat rigged for dive?"
Your guessing drill commences,
"am I dead or still alive?"
You pace the flooded decks with scorn and curse the flaws of man.
Into realms of Rex you've stepped, and here you'll make your stand.
To live your life, as sailors must,
at the bottom of the sea.
There's one you'll have to reckon
- that one, my friend, is thee.
Will your conscience do you justice when the final muster's in?
Did you lead the kind of life you should in every port you've been?
The answers to these questions
and many, many more,
Are locked in the hearts of sailor men from Cannes to Singapore.
So, when your day for mast rolls 'round the choice is up to you,
Sailor chart your course of life right now; chart it straight and true.
Now's the time to flood your tanks and trim up 'fore and aft.
It's a trifle late when the klaxon sounds to square away your craft
Your final billet lies below, on
"old ocean's" floor.
So, be ready when that last word's passed: Sailor, rest your oar.

The Year Loveable Louise Came for Christmas...

As a joke, my brother used to hang a pair of panty hose over his fireplace at Christmas.

He said all he wanted was for Santa to fill them. What they say about Santa checking the list twice must be true because every Christmas morning, although Jay's kids' stockings were overflowing, his poor pantyhose hung sadly empty.

One year I decided to make his dream come true. I put on sunglasses and went in search of an inflatable love doll. They don't sell those things at Wal-Mart. I had to go to an adult bookstore downtown.

If you've never been in an X-rated store, don't go. You'll only confuse yourself. I was there an hour saying things like, "What does this do?" "You're kidding me!" "Who would buy that?"

Finally, I made it to the inflatable doll section. I wanted to buy a standard, uncomplicated doll. One that could also substitute as a passenger in my truck so I could use the carpool lane during rush hour.

Finding what I wanted was difficult. Love dolls come in many different models. The top of the line, according to the side of the box, could do things I'd only seen in a book on animal husbandry.

I settled for 'Lovable Louise.' She was at the bottom of the price scale. To call Louise a "doll" took a huge leap of imagination.

On Christmas Eve, with the help of an old bicycle pump, Louise came to life. My sister-in-law was in on the plan and let me in during the wee morning hours, long after Santa had come and gone, I filled the dangling pantyhose with Louise's pliant legs and bottom. I also ate some cookies and drank what remained of a glass of milk on a nearby tray. I went home, and giggled for a couple of hours.

The next morning my brother called to say that Santa had been to his house and left a present that had made him VERY happy but had left the dog confused. She would bark, start to walk away, then come back and bark some more.

We all agreed that Louise should remain in her panty hose so the rest of the family could admire her when they came over for the traditional Christmas dinner.

My grandmother noticed Louise the moment she walked in the door.

"What the hell is that?"

she asked.

My brother quickly explained, "It's a doll."

"Who would play with something like that?" Granny snapped. I had several candidates in mind, but kept my mouth shut.

"Where are her clothes?" Granny continued.

"Boy, that turkey sure smells nice, Gran," Jay said, trying to steer her into the dining room. But Granny was relentless.

"Why doesn't she have any teeth?"

Again, I could have answered, but why would I? It was Christmas and no one wanted to ride in the back of the ambulance saying, "Hang on Granny! Hang on!"

My grandfather, a delightful old man with poor eyesight, sidled up to me and said, "Hey, who's the naked gal by the fireplace?"

I told him she was Jay's friend.

A few minutes later I noticed Grandpa by the mantel, talking to Louise. Not just talking, but actually flirting. It was then that we realized this might be Grandpa's last Christmas at home.

The dinner went well. We made the usual small talk about who had died, who was dying, and who should be killed, when suddenly Louise made a noise that sounded a lot like my father in the bathroom in the morning. Then she lurched from the panty hose, flew around the room twice, and fell in a heap in front of the sofa.

The dog screamed. I passed cranberry sauce through my nose, and Grandpa ran across the room, fell to his knees, and began administering mouth to mouth resuscitation. My brother fell back over his chair and wet his pants. Granny threw down her napkin, stomped out of the room, and sat in the car.

It was indeed a Christmas to treasure and remember!

Later in my brother's garage, we conducted a thorough examination and found the cause of Louise's collapse. We discovered that Louise had suffered from a hot ember to the back of her right thigh. Fortunately, thanks to a wonder drug called gorilla tape, we restored her to perfect health.

Louise went on to star in several bachelor party movies. I think Grandpa still calls her whenever he can get out of the house.

Coco'Nut' Funnies

I accidentally used my mom's fabric scissors to cut wrapping paper and now the cops are here

After 35 years of trudging through rain, snow, and blazing heat, old Mr. Thompson was finally making his last round as the neighborhood mailman.

At the first house, the family greeted him at the door with hugs and handed him a huge gift certificate.

At the second, he was given a box of fine imported cigars.

At the third, a beautiful set of fishing lures.

Every stop along his route was the same—congratulations, farewell cards, and thoughtful gifts. He was touched by the kindness. But nothing prepared him for the last house.

When the door opened, there stood a gorgeous young blonde in a revealing negligee. Without a word, she took his hand, led him upstairs, and gave him the most passionate "thank you" he'd ever received in his life.

Afterwards, she guided him back down to the dining room, where a feast was waiting: eggs, sausage, ham, potatoes, blueberry waffles, and fresh-squeezed orange juice. When he couldn't eat another bite, she set a hot cup of coffee in front of him.

As he lifted the mug, he noticed a single $1 bill tucked underneath.

Confused, he asked, "Ma'am... this has been the most amazing day of my life. But... what's the dollar for?"

The blonde explained:

"Last night, I told my husband that today was your last day, and we should do something special. He said, 'Screw him—give him a dollar.'"

She winked. "But the breakfast? That was all my idea."

What has 15 actors, four settings, two writers, and one plot?
632 Hallmark movies.

This guy goes into a restaurant for a Christmas breakfast while in his home town for the holidays. After looking over the menu he says, "I'll just have the eggs benedict." His order comes a while later and it's served on a big, shiny hubcap. He asks the waiter, "What's with the hubcap?" The waiter sings, "There's no plate like chrome for the hollandaise!"

I'm trying to get into the Christmas spirit, but I can't get the damn bottle open.

CO-WORKERS ARE LIKE CHRISTMAS LIGHTS. THEY ALL HANG TOGETHER, BUT HALF OF THEM DON'T WORK AND THE OTHER HALF ARE NOT SO BRIGHT.

I'm just gonna jingle some of the way.
I'm tired.

EVERY TIME SOMEONE IN MY HOUSE LEAVES AN EMPTY BOX IN THE FREEZER OR PANTRY, I'M WRAPPING IT IN CHRISTMAS PAPER AND PUTTING IT UNDER THE TREE WITH THEIR NAME ON IT.

Deck the halls and not your family

Another Day of L.O.P.E. —

A blog by Luke Sommer Glenn

I had to stand and shout obscenities for a few minutes. I had hit maximum rage/frustration/absurdity. How could such simple tasks morph into a torture test of my patience and sanity? What grand design or karmic oddity could possibly have arranged this perfect storm of negative circumstances? I would normally pay the people with the tools for the job but in an effort to save money...

It's not only me that is bedeviled by the "more complicated than it has to be" thing. Technology is great when it works but cars, guitar effects and kitchen appliances shouldn't come with an app. Next thing you know, you will have to have a subscription to use your windshield wipers or flush the toilet!

If you don't have any signal or "bars" and/or WiFi then the app is useless. And it needs to know where the refrigerator is located on the planet in order for the app to work. Most of it is just marketing hype with no real world value or practicality, just another way of collecting your information.

Off season is when everything breaks, needs maintenance and/or replacement because of the salty paradise that we live in. Nothing seems to break when I have money coming in, though.

I got a notice that my glasses prescription had expired- I figured as much because I was working on something and reached for my glasses for better focus on the situation and discovered I was already wearing them.

Extra frustration, not being able to see regular print, forget about the fine print. That takes a whole process of finding where I left the magnifying glass with the bfl (bright fking light), which first requires a trip to the store to buy the gd batteries or waiting for it to charge on the USB- that is if I can find the one that fits. Is it a USB A, B or C type? They all look alike until they're under a microscope, except for the big one.

My phone is full of pictures of tiny objects and writing that I can "blow up" with my fingers, pretty handy but time consuming to get the exact shot that holds the answers that I seek. Odd pictures of things like the underside of the truck, a propane cylinder, the electrical panel in the RV... Anything I need to see.

I am grateful for the first 40 years of good vision but I am increasingly annoyed by the declining vision of the subsequent years. The sun hurts my eyes now but my night vision requires the brightness of daylight to see what it is that I am looking at. What a drag. My dear, departed dad warned me about this.

It's amazing how much I tried to avoid acting like him only to find myself being just like him. Aging is its own torture test and another way of discovering what you're made of. My brief experience being dead gave me the insight to know that nothing here matters on the other side- no judgement, no pain, no memories of planet Earth at all. How could a soul be happy if they carried all the trauma of this place back with them?

If you don't like the program, change the channel. If you don't like the story, read a different book, but don't presume that yours is the only opinion that matters. A person who can't understand normal thinking insists that their delicate sensibilities and beliefs be taken into account by everyone else to avoid offending them. Don't be a person who can't understand normal thinking. Live and let live!

Peace,
Luke
